TEXT 1: SOMETHING BORROWED, SOMETHING BLUE... KEY

- 1 Last August, a 911 operator came to the rescue of a desperate bride, but not in the way you would expect. A bride named 2 Amanda had her wedding dress stolen on the morning of her nuptials! She had been packing her car when, upon returning from a
3 quick trip to the house, she discovered the dress had gone missing. Panicking, she called 911 to report the theft.
4 Candice, the 911 dispatcher answering the call, couldn't help but sympathize with Amanda. She said that all she kept thinking
5 was "I have a wedding gown. Maybe she could wear that. Here we go, let's see if she wants it."
6 On an impulse, Candice asked her supervisor if she could offer the bride her dress. Of course, she had no idea if the dress
7 would fit, much less if Amanda would even want to give it a try. Luckily, her supervisor agreed and let her do it. Though grateful
8 for the offer, the traumatized bride asked to see a picture of the gown first. Candice completely understood. She texted the police 9 officer on the scene a picture of the gown and, thankfully, Amanda loved it.
10 The operator then asked her husband to pick up the dress, which was in her parents' attic. After overcoming a series of 11 obstacles, including discovering that he had taken the wrong keys, Candice's husband successfully delivered the dress to the bride 12 in time, and the wedding went off without any further incidents.
13 Some days later, newlywed Amanda surprised Candice at her office to return her dress. She wanted to say a personal and 14 heartfelt thank you to the woman that she believes saved her wedding.

TEXT 2: SANAS CAN CHANGE YOUR ACCENT KEY

1 English is the world's most widely used language. An estimated 1.5 billion people speak it, and most of them aren't native
2 speakers. In the United States alone, millions of people speak English as a second language. A new company called Sanas is 3 testing out artificial intelligence-powered software that aims to eliminate miscommunication by changing people's accents in real 4 time. A call center worker in the Philippines, for example, could speak normally into the microphone and end up sounding more 5 like someone from Kansas to a customer on the other end. The American accent sounds somewhat artificial, Siri-like, but they are 6 working on improving the technology. The idea is that, rather than learning to pronounce words differently, you could have 7 technology do it for you. And understanding would be nearly instantaneous.

8 The three founders of Sanas met at Stanford University, but they're all from different countries originally. All three say they've 9 experienced over the years how accents can get in the way. "We all come from international backgrounds. We've seen firsthand 10 how people treat you differently just because of the way you speak," Maxim Serebryakov, one of the founders, says. He also 11 remarks that people's accents and identities can be closely linked, and he stresses that the company isn't trying to erase accents 12 or imply that one way of speaking is better than another.

13 Eventually, they hope the app they're developing will be used by a variety of industries and individuals. It could help doctors 14 better understand patients. Someday, they say, it could also assist language learners and improve dubbing in movies. It could 15 even help smart speakers in homes and voice assistants in cars understand different accents.
