YORK

York is a fascinating place because for centuries many people have made it their home. The Romans came to York almost 2,000 years ago. Then, in 866 AD, the Vikings arrived. In medieval times York was important because it was the city that was closest to the border between England and Scotland, and these two countries were often at war.

If you visit York, you'll see signs of its long history in the many old buildings that are everywhere. The most famous sights are York Minster, a huge cathedral, and Clifford's Tower, part of a castle that dates from the 11th century. There are also some excellent museums in York. At the Jorvik Centre, you can find out about life in the city when the Vikings were there, or if you prefer, you can visit the fascinating National Railway Museum, the largest railway museum in the world.

It's a good thing that York has some amazing museums, because the weather is often bad. If you visit York, you'll need to bring an umbrella! But you'll love the city because it has so many interesting stories to tell.
